James Strother continues to receive letters from all over the country concening his case, expressive of sympathy and a hope that he will be acquitted. A great number of these have come from friends in West Virginia. He was much affected to-day by the following from the Speaker of the West Virginia House of Delegates, of which Mr Strother is a member:

"House of Delegates, of which Mr Strother is a member:

"Charleston, W. Va. March 4, 1907.

"My Dear Friend,—It is with painful solicitude that I watch the proceedings of your trial, and I assue you that if Henven heard the appeals of one so unworthy you would be benefited thereby. I am sorry to see you involved in this trouble, my mind has never changed. Whatever may be the verdict of the jury or the judgment of the court, I feel proud of your manhood, and I am glad to be accounted your friends, and I am more than proud to see that we still have men in West Virginia who will risk life with all life endearments in protection and defense of the sanctity of our daughters, sisters, wives and mothers.

"I shall watch with intense feeling the outcome of your struggle, My sympathy and kindest regards to your little wife, and believe me, as ever, Yohr friend, "J. A. SEAMAN."

KEITH MAKES FINE OPENING SPEECH

Followed by Mr. Jeffries, Who Stirs His Audience, Evidently Impressing Jury.

Phil Strother looked extremely pale when he appeared in court at 2 o'clock, accompanied by his brother, but he did not give indication of suffering pain or nausea. The court-room was crowded to its capacity, and the doors had to be closed by order of the judge before more than half of the people who desired than half of the people who desired admission had succeeded in getting in-than half of the people who desired admission had succeeded in getting inside.

Judge Harrison, as soon as the jury had entered the box, proceeded to read the instructions which he had prepared after argument of counsel on both sides yesterday. The instructions were printed in The Times-Dispatch this morning.

Mrs. James Strother accompanied her husband into court and sat by him during the afternoon. Mrs. George Williams, a cousin of the Strother boys an elderly lady, occupied an easy chair immediately in the rear of Phill, and wateled him closely, evidently uneasy lest he become too ill to stand the severe strain wholesome condition, the shield and the guardian of all the people. It has no regard for station or class; it can take the king from the throne and cast him into prison."

He spoke in a more or less natural tone, his voice slightly elevated. His manner is attractive and impressive, Mr. Keith proceeded to assume that everything charged against Bywaters had occurred. The brothers had permitted Bywaters had occurred. The brothers had permitted the mayriage and permitted Bywaters to remain in their house for some time, and then, sitting together downstairs, had determined that if he tried to leave the house they would kill him.

"Premeditation."

"Premeditation."

"There was the premeditation," he said. "The act they committed was murder. They went about this thing with cain, deliberate purpose; they had no right to say to him he must stay there that night. If they killed him when he was trying to leave, after they had made up their minds to kill, if that condition arose, the act was murder; premeditation raised tiefference between first and second degree murder; premeditation raised the crine to first degree. Again Mr. Keith enforced the declaration previously made that the boys had no right to kill Bywaters at their home, if a head one.

Mr. Keith then described the difference between first and second degree murder; premeditation raised the crime to first degree. Again Mr. Keith enforced the declaration previously made that the boys had no right to kill Bywaters at their home, if he chose to leave; but he said that extreme anger, if the jury believed there was no fixed purpose, a suden act determined upon under extreme provocation, the crime was mansiaughter. The defense had pleaded insanity in order to escape from the conclusion he had laid down.

The question of reasonable doubt had no application in this case, save as to whether there was premeditation.

Mr. Keith had spoken less than half an hour when Philip Strother had to retire to the open air in order to re-cover from a return of the nausea which had prevented his appearing in which had prevented his appearing in the forenoon.

After ten minutes spent in the open air young Strother returned, and was 1 given the casy chair Mrs. Williams had been occupying. Mr. Keith took up the thread of his argument, discussing in detail the difference between murder in the first degree and mansatughter, discussing the court's instructions seriatim.

These men killed that man with a deadly weapon, and if there was no trovocation it was murder," he exactioned. "If there was provocation it was manslaughter, Provocation does

"Can Blood Cure Insanity?"

"There was a struggle out there that night." Mr. Keith described the sene on the porch, as detailed by Mr. Lemen. He dwelt upon the fact that no effort was made by the brothers to relieve the sufferings of the dying man.

"The acurous thing," he said, "that this kind of Insanity is one cured by human blood that it should cure such man blood that it should cure such insanity as this? They were insane they did the killing."

The plea of insanity being set up by the defense, upon them rested the burden of proof to show beyond doubt they were insane when they committed the act. Philip was using his 32. Mr. Keith argued that Bywaters was shot in the room immediately after he had been pushed or pulled back into the room. Another wound received in front was one of which broke the arm of deceased. It was inflicted by a 32-calibre ball. Mr. Keith argued from various details concerning the course of the bullets. He declared that a study of the course of the bullets, as shown by the various holes and scars, contradicted the testimony of both James and Philip Strother. A piece of Philip Strother's cuff button was found on the porch. He said Philip said it was probably pulled off by striking the window, yet it was the taside piece of the button that was lost. Had it been torn off by the window, Mr. Keith tried to show, the other piece would have been lost. Philip had a scar on his head which he said was received by falling off a bridge, and which had been dressed by Mrs. Lemen.

"Why was not Mrs. Lemen called?" asked the speaker. "I tell you, gentlemen, there is a connection between that scar and that piece of button found on the porch.

"Dismiss all prejudices," he told the jury. "and when you come down to return your verdict allow your oaths and a sense of your duty to God to be your sole guides. Decide the case on the evidence. The Commonwealth will be satisfied."

Mr. Keith spoke for about an hour and thirty-five minutes. The first half of his argument, devoted to discussion of the instructions, was not impressive. But the latter half, devoted to a review and analysis of the evidence in elaboration of the heory of the prosecution that Bywaters was killed in the room and not on the porch, held the attention of the jury-and the spectators without a break. It would be hackneved to call it a masterly effort. It was that and must add greatly to the reputation of the youngest lawyer in the case, He is yet on the sunny side of forty.

EVANGELIST AND SOLOIST DRAWING LARGE AUDIENCES

Interest Increases in Seventh-Street Services-Praise for City Newspapers.

Interest in the evangelistic services at the Seventh Street Christian Church continues to increase, Rev. James Small preaching each night to large and appre-ciative audiences. The music at these services is inspiring and beautiful Mr. Mr. Jeffries described the betrayal of Dinah. Jacob's daughter, by Sheehem and Jacob slew not only the betrayer, but his entire household. The speeke took up a Bible and read the simple story, concluding, and God said unto Jacob. Arise and so up to Bethel:

and Jacob arose of Jacob.

Leroy M. St. John has a mellow baritone voice, and the full chorus choir of the church is doing fine werk.

Rev. Mr. Small's theme last night was "How the Dying Thief Was Saved" The speaker stated that this was a case of prayer where more was received than was expected; that the thief was saved by a penitent prayer and the divine love and compassion of Jesus.

The evangelist also publicly expressed his appreciation of the kind treatment accorded him by the newspapers, complimenting the city on having papers that so willingly gave their assistances. The sermon to-night will be on "The Humanity and Divinity of Jesus." On Thursday and Friday nights the sermons will be specially to the young people.

There was one confession last night, and the interest is manifestiv growing. The song service, led by Mr. St. begins at 7:45 o'clock, and is a very dellughtful feature of the meetings.
